

Social Justice: Responding to Social Inequalities with Social Pedagogy

Recognition of power

POWER

How are we going to empower someone without creating an imbalance of power with the practitioner.

the intersectionality of different types of inequality is often overlooked and needs to be considered more readily the context of the lived experience and the structural inequality should be considered instead of being "blaming"

empowerment

Interest in "otherness" and being mindful not to impose our own values and beliefs

Trust

HALTUNG

To be aware that we do not enforce our own values on to others

Active listening

Self-awareness

Critique

Being aware of our values , how they impact on our practice and how others values are different and need to be respected how do we overcome professional and organisational "competition" (for resources etc) to foster a shared understanding of context and need?

respect

CHANGE

Professional reflection

how can people be given jobs?

Join programmes, co-operation between social workers, teacher, parents, etc...

a young person has been killed in camberwell, so
many questions about this. What does that mean?
what was his background? what was he sad about

An advocate for the family in a primary school (so that parents can have a job, home, etc)

structural equalities

The
government
prioritises
economy over
people

Social work provoking a semiotic cultural revolution towards
interculturality,
empahy and
inclusion!!

As a teacher, I can raise awareness

Reflecting on how to join community in different dimensions of social care. Care as a social issue in a broader sense, not only a quest for Government ans
stakeholders.
